

False flag operations abound

When the colonials raided the British ship at the Boston Tea Party, they disguised themselves as Indians to give the appearance that the Indians did it. We would call that a false-flag operation.

On Feb. 13, a car bomb exploded outside of Israel's embassy in New Delhi, India. The same day, a bomb was discovered under the car of an Israeli embassy employee in Tbilisi, Georgia. The next day, a grenade was tossed into the streets of downtown Bangkok, Thailand. Iran was blamed.

These episodes exude the stench of a false-flag operation.

The U.S. policy think tank, The Brookings Institution, published in June 2009, "Which Path to Persia?" A study on how to provoke Iran into a war. On Page 84 it reads: "Absent a clear Iranian act of aggression, American airstrikes against Iran would be unpopular in the region and throughout the world."

"...it would be far more preferable if the United States could cite an Iranian provocation as justification for the airstrikes before launching them. Clearly, the more outrageous, the more deadly and the more unprovoked the Iranian action, the better off the United States would be."

The report analyses methods to "goad" Iran into committing an act of aggression.

Apparently, another Pearl Harbor, or Gulf of Tonkin, or 9/11, or some such "outrageous" or "more deadly" false-flag attack is in store for us.

We may be able to prevent it with widespread exposure and vehement objection to this diabolical scheme.

Once again, Lititz amazes

Once again, Lititz proves to be an amazing community.

Thanks to all who helped save our post office, from the people who signed letters and petitions, those who collected them, to the local elected officials, to retailers, to those who made and answered surveys, to our state and federal officials who stood behind us.

This was truly a community effort.
